Comic Strips for the '90s

By Bob Boze Bell

I don't know about you, but I'm already fed up with the Eighties (they're too much like the Seventies, the Sixties and the Fifties). Yes, I'm leapfrogging right into the the 1990s. Here we go...

Jumpin' String Bean Murfy

A well-to-do cat from "The City" is cat-napped by terrorists and ends up in a rusted-out car body on the Sonoran desert trying to make do with a whole lot less than he's used to (any similarity to the plight of Americans in the Nineties is purely coincidental).

La Gata

From out of the hills of Central America comes a fighting woman so tough, so crafty, so intelligent so courageous and sooo stacked that I'm positive Hollywood will buy this one before the ink is even dry.

MX Alley

Join the zany adventure of Nukie, who lives in-between two MX missile silos during a showdown by the superpowers. Explosive humor, day after day after day.

Rudy "The Shoe"

A cute little clown goes looking for his shoes and can't seem to ever find them.

The Circle Jerks

Two abstract Moderns insult each other constantly.

Little Wormo

A real wormboy kind of guy gets married and has a real wormboy kind of kid, much to the delight of his basket-case wife.

Little Orphan Aides

A blank-eyed girl with blank immunity tries to cope in the Nineties.

ENUF, BUDDY!

THAT'S A GOOD WAY TO GET YERSELF KILLED, Y'KNOW...

YEAH? WHAT'S IT TO YA?!

BUT YOU DIDN'T STAY TO HEAR
YER FATHER'S ADVICE - YOU SHUT
TH' DOOR ON YER PARENTS FOREVER.

YOU TOOK A BUS TO THE CITY - IT WAS A 3-DAY RIDE... SOMEONE
STOLE YER SUITCASE WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPIN'...

YOU CHECKED INTO A FLEABAG HOTEL
AROUND TH' CORNER FROM TH' BUS

KITCHENETTE WITH A BATHROOM
DOWN TH' HALL...

TH' NOISE OF TH' CITY KEPT YOU AWAKE
FER HOURS - TH' TRAFFIC, TH' PIGEONS
ROOSTING OUTSIDE YER WINDOW - TH'
RADIATOR CLANGING AND WHISTLING...
FINALLY YOU GOT UP AND TURNED ON TH' LIGHT...

IN TH' MORNING YOU WENT STRAIGHT TO TH' MANAGER...

...BUGS! EVERYWHERE!
MILLIONS OF 'EM!
THEM'S COCKARROACHES, KID! NUTTIN' WE CAN DO ABOUT THEM!
SAY - YER NEW IN

IF YA WANT TH' JOB YOU CAN HAVE YER ROOM FREE, PLUS
I'LL PAY YA $15 PER WEEK...
WHATAYA SAY, KID?

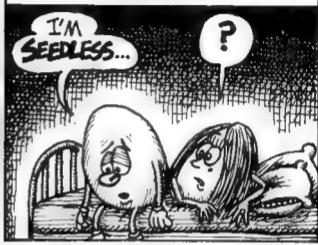

SO YOU TOOK TH' JOB, AND SOON MADE A SMALL DOWN PAYMENT ON THAT LITTLE SPORTS CAR YOU ALWAYS WANTED...

SHORTLY AFTERWARDS YOU FELL HEAD OVER HEELS FER A STREETWALKER NAMED LAYLA...

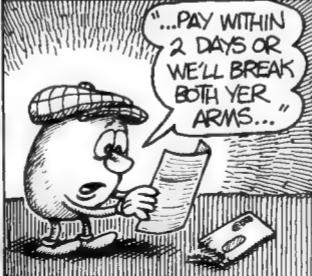

YOU ASKED HER TO MARRY YOU, AND SHE DID—SHE WANTED KIDS, BUT THERE WAS A SLIGHT PROBLEM...

SHE LEFT YOU IN A HURRY, AND THEN YER BOSS CAUGHT YOU LOAFIN' ON TH' JOB ONCE TOO OFTEN...

SUDDENLY, YER CAR PAYMENTS WERE OVERDUE...

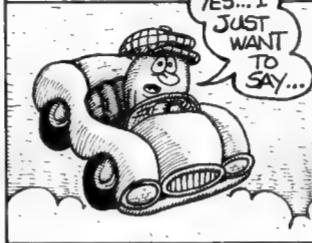

YOU THOUGHT OF ASKING YER PARENTS FER SOME CASH, BUT YOU WERE TOO PROUD TO ADMIT TO THEM THE OBVIOUS TRUTH...

AND YOU DECIDED TO CHUCK IT ALL, RIGHT?

The SPIRIT by Will Eisner

Published monthly, this $1.95 comic reprints four classic tales from Will Eisner's post-World War II period. Each issue features Eisner talking about the stories with Dave Schreiner. THE SPIRIT is universally praised as a pioneer in comics noir, and Eisner is acknowledged as one of the master comics artists.

JUNGLE BOOK by Harvey Kurtzman

Coming in August, this hardcover, deluxe book collects four great stories by the creator of MAD, HUMBUG, HELP and other satirical magazines and features. Intro by Robert Crumb.

CONTRACT WITH GOD NEW YORK and more new work ...by Will Eisner

Kitchen Sink is Will Eisner's publisher—and we're proud of that fact. The above two books are on the stands, and we're planning another ALL NEW work for this year. Eisner is the cartoonist other cartoonists look to for inspiration.

STEVE CANYON Milton Caniff

STEVE CANYON is a $4.95 squarebound book avidly followed by those connoisseurs fond of adventure and Milton Caniff's art. Reprinting chronologically from 1947, each STEVE CANYON features four to six months worth of strips and Caniff talking about the issue's story. Milton Caniff is the greatest—find out why in STEVE CANYON.

BORDER WORLDS by Don Simpson

You laughed at MEGS—now thrill to BORDER WORLDS, Don Simpson's new science fiction tale, published bi-monthly at $1.95. Simpson, a comparatively new artist in the field, garners more praise and followers with each effort. There's a reason for this. Discover BORDER WORLDS and MEGATON MAN!

DEATH RATTLE

This bi-monthly $1.95 comic features tales of the eerie, the unexpected, the out of the ordinary. With artists like Rand Holmes, Jack (Jaxon) Jackson, Will Eisner, Charles Burns, Steve Bissette, and writers like Mike Baron and Jan Strnad, this anthology title features the best contemporary professionals working today.

AND MUCH MORE

This is NOT the full lineup for 1986. We have many more projects in mind for this year, including books by master cartoonists, collections of classic strips, and work by contemporary talents. We're working to produce a solid, all-around package—watch our monthly PIPELINE for details.

THE MAD WORLD OF

When I was growing up in Small Town, USA, MAD Magazine was must reading. You could keep Dave Berg, Al Jaffee, the movie and television parodies, and the confusing redundancy of "Spy vs. Spy." All I wanted were the two or three pages of Don Martin cartoons. There, strange double-jointed humanoids—often saddled with names like Jon Fonebone or Fester Bestertester—were routinely getting smacked in the head with falling safes ("KOONG!"), or swallowing pogo sticks ("GLUK!"), or sticking their faces too close to electric fans ("KLING-DING-GOON!"), or having their heads flattened by steamrollers

DON MARTIN DEPT. PART II

ANOTHER (whew!) VISIT TO THE DOCTOR'S OFFICE

("KLUNKA-CHUNKA KLUNKA-CHUNKA!").

This was entertainment!

Don Martin's work first appeared in MAD Magazine #29 (October 1956) and with but one exception, he's been in every issue since. His work, often described as "insane" or "sick," has earned him the title "MAD's Maddest Artist," which is usually incorporated into the titles of his books. Writing in The MAD World of William M. Gaines, author Frank Jacobs says of Martin: "Physically he is good-looking, socially he is totally uneccentric, and verbally he almost never utters 'Spap!' 'Blort!' 'Vreech!' or 'Katoonga!'" Perhaps this is why he's one of the few cartoonists to be listed in both Who's Who in America and Contemporary Authors.

In addition to his 30 years of MAD cartooning, Don Martin's unique style has adorned advertising campaigns for everything from personal computers to tennis shoes (he designed an alarm clock for American Greetings that bears the inscription "GET THE HELL OUTTA BED!") And in June 1982, he collaborated with director and choreographer Wally Lord and the Fusion Dance Company on the comic ballet, "Heads Up."

Martin, who just turned 55, continues to turn out his two or three MAD pages an issue (as well as a paperback original every two or three years); for the last 27 years, he has lived in Miami, Florida, with his wife Norma (herself an author and sculptor)

—TOM MASON

WAID: Tell me about your childhood. Were you the class funnyman?

MARTIN: Yes, I used to fool around, be pretty much of a wise guy in school. I used to draw cartoons all the time—that goes way back. I could break the kids up that way, get them in trouble sometimes for laughing at my cartoons.

I was born in Paterson, New Jersey and raised in a nearby town called Brookside. My father was a salesman of school supplies and during the depression he was able to buy a twelve-room house in the country outside of Morristown. The house sat on a tree-covered hill and there was a trout stream in front. The area is suburban territory now, but it was very rural then. Winters we could sleigh ride down the street and we never worried about cars. It was a beautiful area, lush and pretty, with farms, hills, and woods.

All the time I was living in the country, doing all this country boy stuff and also drawing cartoons. My friend Owen and I had a newspaper one time. He and I were the only ones who ever saw this paper. I used to do the illustrations for it. We were about twelve or thirteen years old, so the paper contained things of interest to us. If a weasel got into the hen house and killed all the chicks, we would write about that. There would be a weasel's picture and we probably gave him a name.

WAID: What would be your earliest "publishing experience?"

MARTIN: I guess so, along with the school newspapers and camp newspapers, things like that. In school I used to get by my reports by doing cartoons. I used to get pretty good marks on them for originality.

WAID: What got you interested in cartooning in the first place?

MARTIN: I have an older brother, and he was drawing cartoons. That might have been it. I don't know what got him interested in it. [As a salesman of school supplies], our father used to bring home a lot of paper and crayons, pens and colored paper, stuff like that.

I was also just attracted to comics—the funny comics, not the adventure comics.

WAID: Any specifically?

MARTIN: Walt Disney was probably the first interest, I guess. We used to get the New York Herald-Tribune and the Journal-American, and both of them had big Sunday comics sections. The drawings I used to like were Bringing Up Father—Maggie and Jiggs. I don't think I followed the stories, the characters, but I used to marvel at the drawings. Polly and Her Pals were another one—there again, I didn't know the characters, but they had this cat who mocked everything. Smokey Stover, Krazy Kat—this would have been about 1940.

WAID: Where did you go to school?

MARTIN: I went to art school in Newark. I was still living at home and got to Newark by train. I went there for three years—the first could of years I was interested in illustration and was doing cartoons, and I even sent out some cartoons to the Saturday Evening Post and places like that. Then I got interested in fine art, and so I spent a year there just drawing and painting. Then I went on to Pennsylvania Academy of Art in Philadelphia for a year.

WAID: That was quite a departure from the direction your career would eventually take. Was there a specific reason that you drifted off in such a direction? Any other pretty fine arts students you were trying to impress?

MARTIN: (Laughs) No, I just got interested in it due to some of the teachers I had. In some of the illustration classes we had some teachers who also taught painting. They would talk about artists I had never heard of before, and suggested going into New York and going to museums there and seeing what was happening.

WAID: Do you feel that that has added anything to what you do today, that background, that exposure?

MARTIN: Yes, the exposure did, also the method of working, I [learned to] keep on drawing until I get a certain feeling that I want to get. A lot of my work contained grotesque figures like the ones in paintings by Bosch and Bruegel. I think the habits that I developed them of drawing what I felt resulted in the way I draw cartoons. I draw cartoons to be funny. The figures are meant to be comical, that's why the distortions are the way they are. The long face, the long jaw, the eyes close together, they strike me as being funny and they make me smile. Apparently, they make a lot of other people smile, too. The way the feet bend on my figures and all my other distortions come from my painting experiences.

WAID: What were the circumstances surrounding your break from New Jersey into the Big City?

MARTIN: I went mainly to make a living; I couldn't do it as a fine artist, I didn't want to teach or anything, so I went back to drawing cartoons again. I got together a portfolio of humorous drawings and started going into New York. I picked up a couple of little things, like five dollars a spot. I think the first magazine [I worked for] was Fantasy and Science Fiction.

WAID: How hard was it to establish a career? Did you work out of a studio?

MARTIN: For a while I stayed at home and traveled in and out of [New York]. I did some record covers and things. I had very good luck—I got a very good response right away. People liked the drawings that I showed them even though they didn't have any work for me. They would pull someone else into their office to look at all my stuff and laugh and have a good time. I got a lot of enthusiasm.

WAID: Tell me about getting hired on at MAD.

MARTIN: Well, finally, I did move into New York City and got a job in an art studio doing paste-ups and some freelance things like record covers—in fact, I saw one of those record covers just recently.

The art studio was downtown, near the old MAD Magazine building, and my boss suggested I go up there. I got a favorable response. Al Feldstein was there and suggested that I try out an article for them, which I did, and they liked it. "Alfred E. Neuman Answers Your Questions" was the name of it, I believe. They said to loosen up, because the drawings I had shown them had been very tight, design kind of things, very carefully done. So I went home and really loosened up. I had speed lines all over the page when I brought it back. When I drew I scribbled all over the paper. They were silent. Feldstein didn't know what to do. It was all scheduled to go to the engraver's and he couldn't use the work. So he said I could have one more shot at it if I came back tomorrow, so I went back to my room and stayed up all night and ended up with the way I drew now.

After that I did some things about television ads for a couple of issues, take-offs, then I got into the jokes that I do now.

WAID: You've been with MAD for some time. In what ways has your technical style evolved? Your style of humor?

MARTIN: The figures have changed quite a bit. I think that they've gotten mellower—maybe a little cuter, I don't know. The humor, I think too, has gotten a little mellower.

WAID: What do you attribute that to? The steadiness of the work?

MARTIN: Growing up. (Laughs).

WAID: Has MAD itself had any impact on your work? Do you think it evolved any differently by virtue of your birth with MAD than it would have had you hired on at, say, Saturday Evening Post?

MARTIN: Probably, sure. In the beginning, when I would bring my work up, everyone would stand around laughing hysterically at it. I would be laughing so hard, too, that the tears would be running down my cheeks. It really felt great and I would try to be cool. It's like laughing at your own jokes and I didn't want to do that. But I couldn't help it because I felt so good. Here were five guys standing around looking at a picture and really breaking up as if someone had told them a joke. That could have kept me going.

They wouldn't even have had to pay me.

WAID: Do you read the rest of the magazine?

MARTIN: Oh, sure. I read it at the beginning when it was MAD Comics.

WAID: Which cartoonists influenced you? In particular, there seems to be a lot of Virgil Partch in your style.

MARTIN: I liked him very much—I don't know whether he had any influence on the way I draw or not. When I was in high school, I guess, was when he started coming on the scene. I liked him a lot. I liked all the gag cartoonists of the time. I read Post and Colliers—Tom Henderson was one, John Gallagher, I remember. Mort Walker came out of that school, too, cartoons in the Post.

WAID: Describe to me a typical Don Martin working day.

MARTIN: I get up pretty early and like to start working by 9:00. It depends on what I'm doing, if I'm writing or if I'm drawing—mostly I've been drawing recently, doing some advertising work and stuff like that. I work a few hours, have lunch, work a couple more hours, then I go out and run, shower, eat, do maybe another hour or two in the evening.

WAID: Take me, from start to finish, through a particular cartoon. What's the process?

MARTIN: The ideas are worked out from sketching, from doodling, from looking at lists of things, encyclopedias and indexes of encyclopedias, phone books, and other cartoons. I sketch out the idea with each panel on a separate sheet of paper—which is a good way to do panel cartoons, incidentally, because you can edit, substitute, put in panels or take them away, something you can't do if you lay out the whole page at once. You also get a better feeling for timing between panels, one panel to the next, because each panel is like a little surprise.

[Then] I send it [to MAD], and they either send it back, or send it back with a page laid out, and I draw. I sketch up the finished work on typewriter paper and transfer it to the board with a lightbox. It's pencilled quite tightly, very tightly, I get in everything that I'm going to pencil. I do a lot of erasing, a lot of changing, then I link it with a pen.

WAID: What size do you work?

MARTIN: For MAD, twice up.

WAID: Tell me about your series of paperback books. How did they come about? I know at

TOES

"The fact is my big toes stick up like that. I always draw hands with the pinky sticking out too, but my pinky doesn't do that. I draw them that way because it is a funny gesture when people have the pinky sticking out. Oliver Hardy was always doing that. It is a kind of mock daintiness. I never drew those gestures consciously, trying to be funny. My drawings just came out that way. Trying to be funny these things happened, but I didn't sit down and think, 'What's funny? A toe sticking up in the air. OK, I'll do that then. I don't work that way.'

CARTOONS

"To be a cartoonist, you have to know how to draw. I don't know how a school can teach someone to specifically draw cartoons. All that a student gets in cartooning classes is practice in drawing action and gestures. My advice would be to draw simply, know how to create a good composition and how to use black shapes effectively. I still don't know, to my satisfaction, how to use heavy black areas. As far as gag writing goes, that is learned by experience. It helps to look at other cartoons and to listen to comics since they do about the same thing, with their distilled way of saying things. It is important to develop a method or technique that taps free association. There is a gag writers school and I imagine they give students problems to solve, like assignments on describing a character. Those things do enter into cartooning also. There are things that you have to think about, like setting the stage for a cartoon. Making the backgrounds accurate may be important for some cartoonists and not for others. In fact, some cartoonists seem to distill their backgrounds as much as they do their captions. They try to make it as simple as possible. You do have to show where the person is, if he is in his house, if he is in a bar, if he is an office, what kind of office. You have to be able to pick out the things that will make the scene, so the reader knows where the person is at once. There are no rules about the amount of detail that a cartoonist should draw. Some people like to put in a lot of details, a lot of elaborate cross-hatching, and some people want to distill the drawing down to the simplest lines that they can. There are no rules, it is up to the artist. I don't think detail is essential to a gag or to the cartoon, most of the time. That's all gravy."

the time they began, New American Library had already started doing MAD paperbacks

MARTIN: Right. The MAD editor up there at the time was [Ragtime author] E.L. Doctorow. He was interested in my drawings, we were corresponding, and he was thinking of me doing some children's books. I remember sketching up Alice in Wonderland, but I don't know what happened to [those pieces].

Meanwhile, I was working with a friend of mine who has since died. He wasn't a professional gag writer, but he was a very funny guy, and we were kicking around an idea for a comic book. Instead of laying out the ideas that we came up with on the comic page, I was doing them in the same way I was doing MAD—each panel on a separate sheet of paper. I pasted the drawings back-to-back and put them in a loose-leaf notebook and discovered that I had a book. I sent that to [Doctorow], and that was the first book. That was 1961. They did another one the following year, and after that it's been every two years.

WAID: Over the years, MAD seems to have gotten comfortable with a predominately teen-aged audience. Do you see yourself gearing the bulk of your cartoons and/or books towards any particular age group?

MARTIN: No, I don't. I would like to get into an older audience, also—not instead of, just also—but I just do what strikes me as funny.

WAID: What do you do to relax? Do you paint, sketch, produce any non-humorous work?

MARTIN: No, I don't. I have a bicycle, I get out into the country with that. I go to the beach. I have a boat and a canoe.

WAID: Have you ever thrown your hands in the air and said, "That's it. The well is dry. I have no more gags"?

MARTIN: No, I haven't. It's a lot of work to come up with gags, but I've found that if I keep after it, they come back up.

WAID: When you get an idea for one, do you lay your pencil to paper immediately, make a note to come back to it later, or what?

MARTIN: I've found I have to draw while I'm thinking.

WAID: In other words, you can't just be sitting there in the easy chair watching television and jotting down ideas for gags?

MARTIN: That happens rarely.

WAID: What impacts upon you on a day-to-day basis? What do you "draw" from?

MARTIN: I think I'm still drawing on the things that impressed me when I was a kid, like the comics that I told you about. Like Laurel and Hardy, for example, and Charlie Chaplin. My sense of humor when I was a young boy.

WAID: No more modern-day influences?

MARTIN: Yes, but I find it still goes back to [my youth]. I like comics and comedy. There are not too many funny movies that I see. I like Woody Allen a lot, Steve Martin's movies a lot. There's a couple of comedy clubs around, we go to them now and then.

Looking at other people's cartoons, too—I like Gary Larson. He reminds me of Kliban, who I like very much. I like the New York cartoonists, George Booth, Sam Gross. I like the animated cartoons, the Warner Brothers cartoons. I just saw an exhibition of Chuck Jones's cartoons, and they were very funny—Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck. I think Sylvester the Cat is my favorite of all those.

WAID: What are the things that Don Martin finds the funniest—what in the comic strips, the movies, the entertainment media in general?

MARTIN: That's about it. I get Punch magazine, I like the cartoonists in there. One cartoonist named Banx, especially, who is like a bigfoot cartoonist.

WAID: Is there a single most important ingredient to comedy. To cartooning in particular?

MARTIN: I don't have any ideas what it is. Exaggeration and surprise, incongruity and things like that. All those elements. Surprise is part of it in that the joke is sort of unexpected. I know in the kinds of things I do, if you can see the joke coming, most of the time it is going to be rejected. In certain jokes, it's okay to see what is coming. In fact, I have seen Laurel and Hardy do things where you can see the joke coming and it is as funny as can be. You see the banana peel laying there and you know one of them is going to fall on it. They get their humor out of when it happens. It ends up that slipping on the banana peel isn't the joke after all. In my things, I know that if I let the reader know what is going to happen, it is not a good cartoon any more. A lot of the problem in working out a gag has to do with controlling this element. If it is too far out, too much of a surprise, then it is not going to work either. The gag has to have its own kind of inner logic. It's not the logic of our real world, but there has to be some connection or logic in it, otherwise nobody would get it. A gag has to be something fairly universal, also, something people can relate to and understand.

WAID: Are there any "sacred cows" that even Don Martin won't poke fun at? If so, why? If not, why not?

MARTIN: I don't think so.

MRS. MARTIN: Listen, I don't think he has any... our cat just very recently got terribly sick. He's an old cat, he's 17 years old, and his kidneys are failing. It was a very emotional experience. It's only been during the past two weeks, and I'm laughing, but I'm really miserably unhappy.

So we were at the vet, and I don't just want to let that cat, when he dies, get dumped in a dump. I want to—not bury him formally, but I feel we should cremate him. We're discussing this kind of thing. We started talking about how we'd have to bring the cat to the vet and they'd put him to sleep and we'd have to take him to the place where the cremation was. He said, "Could you just picture it, you're trying to open the car door with the key in one hand and you've got this dead cat rolling out of your arms?" So Don doesn't have any sacred cows.

MARTIN: I think that anything can be poked fun at.

MRS. MARTIN: You know about that HBO thing—Comic Relief? That's a pretty rough subject to make fun of.

MARTIN: When I started in the '50s, sick humor was just coming in and it was something that had to do with people being mutilated.

They were flattened, blown up, and distorted in various ways. I did a lot of those kinds of gags. That kind of humor has been around for a long time in animated cartoons, like Tom and Jerry. Now sick humor was mostly jokes about taboo subjects, things that we were not supposed to make fun of, like multiple sclerosis, iron lungs, or amputees. Those jokes also had a lot of violence, bloodletting or mutilation, which is where I come in, I guess. That was all right with me. There are some people who get their gags by reading through the newspaper. These people want to make some social comment along with being funny. They want to satirize. The way I write gags is the same as the way I draw. I am just trying to be funny. I don't usually make much of a comment socially or politically. It's a silly sense of humor. I love Laurel and Hardy's slapstick and nonsense. Doors slamming in people's faces are fun. Pies in the faces are fun.

WAID: Tell me about your famous sound effects. What makes them "ring so true?"

MARTIN: I don't know. I didn't do them at first, it took a couple of years. Then, when I started doing them, I began having fun with it and tried to amuse myself. I think up what a certain thing would sound like, then I fool around with the word itself and try to get a funny sound out of it. I think the combination of the two is what's successful.

WAID: What else have you been working on recently?

MARTIN: As I said, I'm doing some advertising work. There's also a company in Germany that's starting to animate my work. They're doing things mostly for European television, that's the way it'll start out.

WAID: Any chance we'll see these pieces on American cable?

MARTIN: I hope so.

MRS. MARTIN: Don was interviewed by a local TV station and they put one of the test pieces with the interview. It really looks super.

WAID: I bet it was a big thrill for you to see your work translated into another medium after thirty years.

MARTIN: Yes, it was.

WAID: Did they do a respectable job?

MARTIN: Yes. It was just a sample—I think that they'll do much better.

WAID: I can see how your work would adapt so beautifully to animation. I'm surprised no one has approached you before.

MARTIN: There've been feelers, but this is the first time it's actually been done.

I'm also thinking about doing a book for adults.

MRS. MARTIN: The title will be Don Martin's Reader for the Unexpurgated Adult. The theme is sex, but no vulgar [material]. It will have different things covered in it. There's going to be a section on the human form in art through history, and he's already done that one.

WAID: Do you have a publisher lined up?

MARTIN: No one definite yet—it's just something I'm working on.

INGLEDY-GLINGLEDY—DINGLEDY-DONG
Ooops! That's my doorbell, Mark. Sorry, I have to go. Bye!

How many demigods does it take to screw in a lightbulb?

Good question. If anyone knows, it's Mark Marek, chronicler of Hercules Amongst the North Americans, the strip that charts the daily struggles of the legendary Greek strongman as he carves out a life for himself alongside the refrigerator repairmen and blue-haired housewives of 20th century America.

Marek, who makes his home in New Jersey, was actually born and raised in Dallas, Texas—not exactly one of the cultural meccas of Western civilization. Nevertheless, his interest in illustrative art was sparked at an early age. "It goes back to grade school. When I was a kid, we had a blackboard, and once and a while I'd get my dad to come over to it. I'd say 'draw Popeye.' He'd draw Popeye. I'd say 'draw a mountain,' or whatever. He was able to draw it. I was always amazed. It was magical to watch somebody pull an image out of their head and put it on paper."

Naturally, then, young Marek eventually began producing artwork for his own amusement. "I've always exploited it, like when I had to do book reports, I'd always add little drawings to them. The teachers would love it. I guess that's why I have a tendency towards figurative imagery as opposed to abstract expression, recognizable figures, because I realized at an early age that I could use that."

By the time Marek graduated from high school, he had no doubts as to what vocation he'd be practicing for the rest of his life. "I wanted to go to school out of state in Chicago, but my parents couldn't afford it, so, out of practicality, I went to Austin—which actually turned out to be a pretty good school. This was in '74.

"My major was in studio painting. I wasn't really interested in illustration, although that's what I do now as a profession. The charm about college is that you have four years of freedom to really mess around. That's why I took a very liberal arts/fine arts major—I could cut loose, do whatever I wanted, explore things. You can always learn illustration techniques in the field. When I came [to New York], I didn't know hardly any techniques. I learned as I went along. Total freedom, and not worrying about having to make a buck—that's what college meant to me."

"In that respect, I did dabble in more abstract work, and I was able to really loosen up my style. My style before college was very tight pen-and-ink, nothing like I do now. I burned out on that kind of extreme realism and just went crazy with style."

"After I graduated, I came right up to [New York City]. Basically, if you're into the arts or anything along those lines, you either go to San Francisco, Chicago or New York—and I think you go to San Francisco or Chicago

by MARK WAID

ARKKK

if you're afraid of New York." Marek insists that the culture shock between Texas and New York wasn't that jarring. "Coming up here was easy—I've always liked the northeast, and I guess after just being in Dallas for 20 years and doing nothing, I was ready to do something, desperate to do anything, and I knew that New York was where everything was."

Before long, Marek got involved in New York's underground comix scene, finding it to be the best place to continue working in the more abstract style to which he'd become accustomed. To those weaned on the work of the superslick cartoonists, Marek's artistic approach might seem a little—oh, bizarre. But, says Marek, "it's fast. It allows me to get an idea on paper. Although the drawing is at least as—if not more—important than the concept, I see it as a vehicle to get [the concept] out fast and move on to something else. It's not that it's careless—it includes all the work previous to it—but it's not dried out, it's as fresh as I can make it. Momentum is something I hate to lose. I hate to get bogged down."

Marek explains the genesis of his style by talking about his experiences with New Wave Comix. "What that was, was to take an idea and do a strip on it—to take any topic and have a discussion with myself, not knowing where I was going. I didn't sit down and work out the whole script, work out a one-two-three punchline situation. Instead, I would take a topic, like a waitress or whatever—something superficial, it really didn't matter—and the first panel would be something that could stand on its own. Then I'd work on the next panel, it would follow the first panel, going towards the end but not knowing how I was going to end [the strip]. Something I'd come up with a surprise ending that I found was funny or interesting. The whole Newave phase was a crazy phase."

Hercules Amongst the North Americans was a direct outgrowth of Marek's work in New Wave Comix, though a fundamental difference between it and his earlier work was Marek's own degree of self-restriction. "With Hercules, I got more into knowing a little more concretely where I was going. I usually base each strip on a parallel between American and Greece—like diners or whatever—and don't think it through too much, but instead get started drawing as quickly as possible." Hence, Marek began producing vignettes starring Hercules as a contestant on Jeopardy ("Greek Greats for $200!"), as a traveller lost in the wandering labyrinth underneath Manhattan (a.k.a. Penn Station), and as a lover trying vainly to appease his girlfriend with the Golden Fleece (a genuine hand-spray-painted sable fur). Not to mention as a guy who raises hell when the guys at Midas Muffler can't turn his car into gold.

"I just don't trust myself if I work too long on an idea. I only trust myself if I'm not ahead of myself. Actually, when I come to the end of a strip, if I don't have an ending in mind but I find one, it'll surprise me. If I've thought about an ending, I'm not sure any more. I work it out on a piece of paper, then get the strip done and go. 'Well, I've been thinking about this for a while and it doesn't sound funny any more.' When I spend a lot of time on a piece is when I go 'I don't know what's going on here anymore.' I get lost.

"If I had my choice, a lot more of my strips would be open-ended. But a lot of editors have gotten on me about that. They don't like that esoterica, and prefer more of a punchline."

Marek really began to make his mark when Hercules began appearing in High Times and National Lampoon. Soon afterwards, even casual MTV viewers—those that don't read Times or NatLamp—were given their opportunity to become familiar with Marek's work when he provided the animation for the Cyndi Lauper video, "She-Bop." According to Marek, that particular project was a direct offshoot of a limited edition compilation from New Wave Comix. "That ended up in a lot of people's hands, one of them being Cyndi Lauper, who liked my work. She wanted me to do this cover for her EP dance single of 'She-Bop,' so I did this redrawing of one of the strips. She actually wanted the panel verbatim, but I took it out and rewrote it because, at the time, I didn't like the drawing any more. Then her video director called me and asked if I'd like to be involved in the animation for the video.

"After that, I did a small, fifteen-second Hercules piece for MTV," which led to more of the spot-animation work that Marek continues to produce for the video network from time to time. "I also just did a bit of animation for a McDonald's commercial. They didn't use all my stuff. They thought it was pretty crazy, so I'm sure that it won't be anything that looks like my stuff, but I did have a 'Brush With McDonalds,' yeah."

Animation aside, though, cartooning continues to be Marek's primary interest. "There's a character I'm working on now that goes even farther than Hercules. This is the character I'd done originally for the Rolling Stones album, a character called Dirty Father Harry, basically a kick-ass, Dirty Harry priest, in a kind of Raymond Chandler-ish detective format. He's a tough detective—his subtitle is 'Private Celibate Dick.' I did this for the Rolling Stones and they loved it, but eventually their lawyers read it and said, 'We can't do this—the midwest will never buy it.' I was really disappointed. The National Lampoon is printing it right now—I got them to print it by telling them that the Rolling Stones were using it on their album.

"With this character, I pick a certain aspect of religion that I can relate to a Raymond Chandler-type of detective. Like Hercules, actually—you take a character who has a really strong identity and put him in any basic situation and it'll be interesting. In this respect I actually am writing out the scripts before I get started drawing."

Does Marek always prefer to work in a humorous context? "No, not always. I think that my sensibilities lend themselves to humor, that's the avenue I most often take. It's not really humor, though—it's cynicism or satire. Biting humor. Maybe I shouldn't be doing it after a while because I've gotten comfortable with it, but I find I can get things across clearly with humor—as long as it has some degree of angst or cynicism to it."

FIRKIN by Hunt Emerson and Tim Manley; 3.99 pounds; 96 pages; Virgin Books, 328 Kensal Road, London, W10 5XJ, England

"Like most humans you've probably got the gall to think your sexual behavior is absolutely normal. Sheesh! You should see it through the eyes of a cat! And you can do that very thing just by buying this book."

Jeez... I don't know where we find stuff like this...

"The Firkin Version" is a two-page strip that appears regularly in the British skin-mag Fiesta. Therein, Firkin the Cat (and his pal Colin Condom) marvel at (a) the stupid things we do before we get laid; (b) the stupid way we lay; and (c) the stupid things we do after we get laid. Now, this isn't going to open up any new vistas for you or anything, but Firkin's observations are rather witty and perceptive, worth a look, and probably (next to "Amputees in Bondage") the best thing in Fiesta. Too, it's fairly well drawn for what it is. If you like Gilbert Shelton's work, then you should feel comfortable with Firkin immediately.

Editor Mason warned me that Firkin was pretty nasty when I volunteered to review it. I scoffed. Any of us who ever went for an evening south of the border with Gary Groth (or saw the pictures) couldn't easily be put off by a book of cartoons (though, thinking back on it, being given a raunch alert by a man who talks frequently about making tea out of girls' underwear probably should have registered a little more strongly).

So I settled down with it one evening, and found that Firkin was quick and amusing reading. Admittedly, part of the fun of this very British comic came from finding a bunch of new and... descriptive terms the likes of which I'd never heard ("a bit of a gobble," "ladies' knickers," etc.). Nevertheless, even I blanched more than once. You can take the boy out of the Midwest, but you can't take the Midwest out of the boy, and all that.

So Don't Be Fooled: Firkin is interesting, and, in places, funny as hell. It's also raunchy beyond belief and if, buried deep in your soul, and covered over by layers of adult rationale, there's even the slightest trace of any deep-rooted fundamentalist morality left over from your childhood—well, you'll have heard it by the time you get to page 104 or thereabouts.

That advisory, too, is predicated on your finding it in the first place. If you live outside the New York or Los Angeles areas, I wouldn't count on your local neighborhood comics shop carrying it. They know that your local neighborhood Knights of Jesus Christ will probably as keen observation of the social scene goes, Eyebeam is a match for Doonesbury or Bloom County, though the focus is more personal and collegiate (and then corporate) than political. And when it comes to comic imagination that cuts loose and soars where it will, this stuff leaves everything else behind. That Garfield books should be outselling the Bible and Gone With the Wind while Eyebeam is known primarily to readers of alternative weekly papers in a few cities in Texas is another sign of the approaching heat-death of the universe, but this hefty four-volume sampling is available to anyone with a little determination, money, and, if necessary, a stamp. You would be wise to buy them all. When you start reading, it is very ly enough, the few that aren't predicated on a man being in bed), such as when our bedridden hero wakes up hung over, with a tongue so fury he wraps it around his neck for warmth—or his disappointment when he learns that his genital cyst is just that, and not a "new secondary sexual characteristic."

If anything good can be said about Slump, it's that the jokes aren't repetitious. That doesn't mean they're good—they're just not repetitious. Not recommended.

I am not a prophet or a seer, I am just a man who couldn't take it any more and decided to lie down."

Slump.

96 pages of a man who's decided to stay in bed for the rest of his life.

After having slogged through the damn thing, I'm tempted to lie down for a little while myself.

According to the introduction, Slump previously appeared in England's New Statesman, which is a frightening thought—while reading this collection of strips all in one sitting was grueling, I'd think that encountering it piecemeal once a week would be downright unbearable. There's just not that much to it. High concept, low execution. A one-note joke. Funnier than Nancy, but what is that saying?

All right, I smiled when he got an eviction notice from the bedbugs, but that was about it. Will Self is probably a witty fellow—there are some slightly funny strips (strange-who builds an atomic particle accelerator in her basement, which malfunctions and creates a black hole that she falls through in the company of her nerdish cousin Ralph. She has several earnestly funny and uninteresting adventures in an alternate universe, while her eccentric scientist uncle Bork works to bring them back.

Books like this are hard to figure. It looks like it is intended as a children's book, and the artwork—simplistic crudity masquerading as New Wave—should be unacceptable to any adult reader, but there are frequent lumps of abstract/philosophical verbal humor that would sail over the heads of most high-school students.

The writing is as stiff as the drawing, equally unshaded and without detail. The love for big ideas and sparseness of their execution, the flatness of the characters, concepts like "Planet of the He-Man," and the frequent incidence of blank pages, full-page chapter-ending illustrations, and full-page chapter headings, in a book that totals 46 pages, make this effort look suspiciously like what a 12-year-old boy would come up with over an intense weekend. Your mother probably has your version of this stored in a shoebox somewhere—which is preferable to her having put it between slick covers and selling it for $5.95.

RODNEY: The Premonition II (THE ASTOUNDING AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE MAN WHO BLEW UP THE WORLD IN 1985)

IT WAS SUNDAY, NO-ONE WAS AT WORK. THE MEN WERE ALL DOWN BY THE HOLY CHURCH OF THE ECLIPSE, ALL FOLKING AT ONCE -

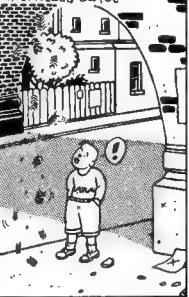

That evening Lucifer walked down our street

THE ANGEL OF RETRIBUTION BLINDED HIM AND HUNG HIM UP BY HIS TIE FROM THE BRIDGE,

IT SMELLED AWFUL...

I THOUGHT OF PRESSING THE BUTTON ON MY DISINTEGRATION MACHINE BUT CURIOSITY STAYED MY THUMB.

MRS. MAENAD WOULD COME OVER FOR MORNING COFFEE AND ONE DAY SHE BROUGHT MUM A POTTED PLANT AS

MUM AND MRS. MAENAD WOULD TEAR THE HEADS OFF THE PAGAN FUNGIUS AND EAT THEM

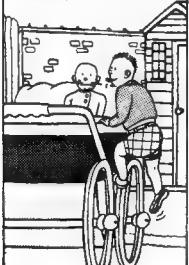

IN THEIR INTOXICATED FRENZIES THEY'D GO DOWN THE STREET TEARING THE HEADS OFF CHILDREN.

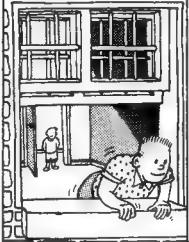

WHEN THE SCIENTISTS TOOK MY MOTHER AWAY FOR EXPERIMENTATION MY STEP-FATHER DIED. I DESPISED HIM FOR HIS WEAKNESS..

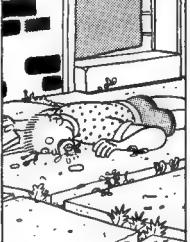

WHEN I WAS A BABY, COUSIN ALFIE LIKED CHOCOLATE FROM MY FACE ~

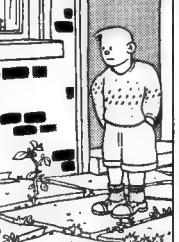

I PLANNED MY REVENGE FOR 3 YEARS. WHEN HE WAS LEANING FROM THE BACK WINDOW I ALLOWED HIM TO FALL OUT.

SO THAT MY AUNT SUSAN WOULD NOT BE HAUNTED BY HIS SCREAMS, I HAD SHOVED AN APPLE IN HIS MOUTH ~

HIS SPIRIT IS TRAPPED IN THE TREE THAT GROWS FROM THE APPLE SEEDS WHERE HE FELL ~

ON COLD WINTER NIGHTS I LISTEN TO HIM CRYING WITH LONELINESS

WHEN I WAS YOUNG I WAS VERY SHY

THE OTHER BOYS TAUNTED ME

I VOWED THAT ONE DAY I WOULD KILL THEM ALL

IN THE MEANTIME, I CONTENTED MYSELF WITH PUTTING GROUND GLASS ON THE SOAP ~

RODNEY: The Premonition II (THE ASTOUNDING AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE MAN WHO BLEW UP THE WORLD IN 1985)

When I was fifteen I left home ~ I packed very little besides my precious weapon of destruction ~ THE WORDS OF DOOM ~

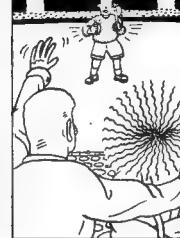

I had been with me since my birth and was very much a part of me ~

A t-shirt passed telling me to nuke my parents ~ it could only have been a message from god ~

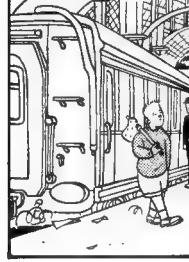

ZAGGA ZAGGA...

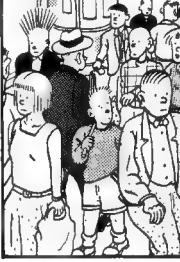

I hate goodbyes ~

I ARRIVED IN LONDON with nowhere to go and no-one to love me, having just bumped off my parents ~

The city was a big cold place ~ it held no warmth for the weary traveller

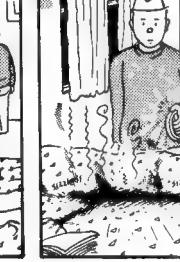

No-one wanted to pass a minute or two with me ~ Wanna play Monopoly? ~

Except one unscrupulous woman who drew me into a game of sexual corruption. I humoured her for a while

It's a lonely world ~

I GET MY FIRST JOB shortly after arriving in London. I hate my employer.

I can't think of any poetically cute ways of destroying him like you get in the fantasy comics ~

(such as death by choreography)

(death by just desserts)

(or death by harsh consumerism)

TO BE CONTINUED...

What if you woke up one day and it was 1947?

And it stayed 1947 all day

(you ate 1947 food, breathed 1947 air)

wore 1947 clothes, talked to 1947 people

And you went to bed and woke up the next morning and it was still 1947!

And every day was 1947 for a whole year and there was nothing you could do about it.

It used to be like that for some people.

WHO'S WHO

BOB BOZE BELL

is the creator of Honky Tonk Sue. His work appears weekly in Phoenix, Arizona's alternative newspaper, New Times; two collections of his work, Low Blows and Even Lower Blows have been published in the last year. They can be had for $9.95 a copy from Low Blows, P.O. Box 2510, Phoenix, AZ 85002

CHESTER BROWN

is the creator of Yummy Fur, a digest-sized magazine that features his creations, Ed The Happy Clown and The Man Who Couldn't Stop. A sample copy is available for $2.50 from 22 Albany Avenue, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5R 3C3.

EDDIE CAMPBELL

is the creator of Alec, two volumes of which have been published by Escape Publishing. His work appears regularly in Fast Fiction and Escape.

ANDREW CHRISTIE

works for the Gemological Institute of America where he examines precious stones with an unwavering critical eye. He recently interviewed Margi Clarke, making him the envy of his friends.

DANIEL CLOWES

contributes frequently to Cracked magazine. He's also the creator of Lloyd Llewellyn, the too-cool detective, whose bi-monthly exploits are published by some outfit called Fantagraphics Books. He has a tendency to move every month.

GLENN DAKIN

has just had his first collection of "Temptation" strips published by Escape. Upcoming in HONK! is his Captain Oblivion strip "Blinkers" and his "Dr. Blood—Vampire Hunter" collaboration with Ed Pinsent.

PHIL ELLIOTT

(is with Dave Thorpe and Lawrence Gray) the creator of Doc Chaos, the third volume of which was just published by Escape Publishing. His work appears regularly in Casual Casual, Fast Fiction, and Escape Magazine; he has a four-issue mini-series, Second City, coming from Harrier Comics later this year; and he will be contributing to Fantagraphics Books' Prime Cuts anthology. In 1987 he may take a nap.

MARC HEMPEL

is partners with Mark Wheatley (with whom he created Mars for First Comics and Blood of the Innocent for WaRP Graphics) in Insight Studios. The "Cartoon Man" episode that appears in this issue originally ran in Eclipse Magazine #1 back in 1977. He's promised new episodes but only if we continue to spell his first name correctly.

DAVID MILLER

draws for alternative publications while living a fairly normal life on the side. He's lived in California all his 32 years, the last four in Berkeley. He hasn't found a reason to stop drawing yet.

MARK WAID

lives in Wichita Falls, Texas where he surprises everyone by finding enough to do to fill his day. He also tells vicious lies about the HONK! editor.

GARY WHITNEY

lives in Chicago where he created Phoebe And The Pigeon people with Jay Lynch. In the early '80s, he self-published Windy City Comics and worked for Cascade Comix Monthly doing "Flying Fungus" Funnies."

J.R. WILLIAMS

(that's "Jim," friends) is a native Oregonian who does not own a television set. He plays the ukulele, still likes to read Dr. Seuss, and thinks the Ramones are "cool." In spite of the acceptance of certain adult responsibilities, he refuses to grow up. He's old enough to know better.

RECOMMENDED READING

Escape: Britain's magazine of international story strips. Eddie Campbell, Phil Elliott, Glenn Dakin, Ed Pinsent, John Bagnall are all regulars. $4.00 to Escape, 508 East 79th Street, New York, NY 10021. Highly recommended!
